1. In a case in ejectment, where the signatures to certain deeds purporting to convey the land in controversy are in dispute, and a note, obviously signed by the alleged forger of the said deeds, and not admitted and read in evidence, is allowed, accidentally or otherwise, to be taken into the jury room, remaining in the hands of the jury during their consideration of the verdict, it is fair to assume, unless definitely demonstrated to the contrary, that such note with its signature were consideration onto with its signature were consideration. finitely demonstrated to the contrary, that such note with its signature were considered and examined by the jury, and its admission to the jury room was prejudicial to the party against whom the verdict was rendered and calls for a reversal of the verdict and a new trial of the cause.

Held, that such statements made to the representative of the attaching creditors, where he, on the strencth of said statements, incurred in their behalf additional expenses in prosecuting the proceedings in attachment, worked an estoppel of the shipper of said goods and concluded the firm from setting up a title to them in a subsequent action of replevin to re-

Russell against Horn. Error from Douglas county. Reversed and remanded. Opinion by Irvine, C.

1. R and P claim to have a contract with the H company whereby H and P were to have the exclusive right to self goods manufactured by the H company in certain territory and whereby the H company was forbidden to self these goods to others within that territory. At the request of R and P assissman of the H company made an estimate to a third person of the price of certain goods, the evidence tending to show that the salesman was latroduced to such third person by R and P with the statement that anything he did would be satisfactory to R and P. The salesman sold the goods' directly to such third person for the H company and not for R and P. R and P sought to recover from the H company for profits lost because of such transaction. The H company claimed that R and P had waived their exclusive right in his instance. The court instructed the jury in effect that if R and P introduced the salesman to such third person with the statement that any agreement he made would be satisfactory and if the third person did not then understand that he was to procure the goods from R and P. then such facts constituted a waiver; held, erroneous, because in an action between R and P and the H company the purchaser's understanding was immaterial, and it was for the jury to determine from all the evidence whether or not there had been a waiver, this instruction substituting the fudgment of the purchaser for that of the jury upon this point.

2. There also being a claim for damages because of alleged sales by the H company to deliver to R and P goods which they had contracted to sell and deliver; held, that the measure of damages because of such sales was the profit which R and P's territory in violation of the contract; held, that he measure of damages was the diffe

1. A court of equity, in a proper case, will restrain the sale of the property of a surety for the satisfaction of a judgment against him when it appears that the principal debtor has sufficient property liable to execution within the jurisdiction of the court for the satisfaction of such judgment; at least until after the property of the principal debtor has been exhausted.

2. It seems that a court of equity, upon principal debtor has been exhausted.

2. It seems that a court of equity, upon the application of a surety in a judgment, will restrain the sale of such surety's property for the satisfaction of such judgment until the property within the jurisdiction of the court belonging to his co-surety has been exhausted, when it appears that such surety incurred the obligation on which the judgment is based, at the request of the co-surety and upon his promise to indemnify and save him harmless by reason thereof.

3. Where the liabilities of sureties in a judgment are all equal, and where the relations between them are not such that one surety is surety or guarantor for the other, a court of equity will not in any manner assume to control an officer holding an execution for the satisfaction of a judgment, and will not direct whether he levy the execution upon the property of all the sureties or satisfy the entire judgment out of the property of one of them.
